UK Outlook for Saturday 13 Nov 2021 to Monday 22 Nov 2021:
Remaining changeable and autumnal particularly to the west and northwest through the start of this period as low-pressure systems dominate, where cloud and outbreaks of rain are most likely with the chance of persistent rain here, with occasional strong winds. Drier, brighter conditions are more likely in the southeast. There is an increasing risk of heavy, blustery showers in the north later in the period, whereas the driest and brightest weather is likely to be in the southeast of the UK, with rain spreading to some southeastern areas at times. Temperatures expected to remain around average, although milder interludes may be prevalent at first, and colder interludes increasingly possible later, some wintry conditions are possible over higher ground in the north, with a slight risk at lower levels.
